

Congressman Wally Herger was recently honored by the Klamath Alliance for Resources and the Environment (KARE) for his unflagging support of rural, timber-dependent communities. The award was presented by Danielle Lindler, the former executive director of KARE in Siskiyou County. Herger has authored several pieces of legislation to restore balance to federal environmental policy. "We won some battles and lost others, but we never gave up the fight. You are never beat until you quit," Herger said.
